

A Multi-Method Approach to Narrative Research – a two-day workshop with Professor Greer Johnson (Griffith U, Qld)

In this workshop Greer will present aspects of her work on narrative, discourse and identity research. The workshop includes three sessions. In the first session, on the morning of Day 1, Greer explains and demonstrates how narrative inquiry can include aspects of ethnomethodology and critical discourse analysis in the conduct of visual and interview data analysis from a micro-macro perspective. There will be time also for participants to discuss and plan an analytic pathway through some of their data with Greer.

In the second session, following lunch on Day 1, participants will have the opportunity to apply their analytic plan to their data. There is the possibility of working alone or with others on shared data here.

In the final two sessions, on day two, participants will present their analysis-in-process to the group. Greer will act as a discussant to the presentations and respond to further questions.

Overall, the workshop will assist the participants to begin work on what might become a paper for submission to a referred journal or a thesis or book chapter.

Readings will be distributed to registered participants prior to the workshop.
